Out and About

Not much seems to happen in Washington during August, but come September the social season begins. One of the early major events of the fall is the National Women's Political Caucus "Good Guys" awards to those men the caucus believes are right on women's issues. This year's awards will be presented Sept. 13 to former labor secretary Bill Brock, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, actor Richard Gere, television producer Gary David Goldberg, Reps. Peter Rodino and Bill

Green, "Sally Forth" comic-strip artist Greg Howard, Avon Products Inc. Chairman and CEO Hicks B. Waldron, United Food and Commercial Workers president William H. Wynn and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young . . .

Former CIA director William E. Colby and his wife, former ambassador Sally Shelton, who have been quietly working for the past several years with the National Coalition to Ban Handguns, are opening their Georgetown home later this month for a coalition fundraiser that will feature the music of 71-year-old cabaret mouth organist Larry Adler. Colby has said he learned of the dangers of handguns during his years at the CIA . . .

Sportswriter and man about town Mo Siegel, who underwent successful cancer surgery early in August, was back at his old table at Duke Zeibert's this week. He says he expects to return to writing again on a part-time basis beginning next week . . .

If the Republicans win, it shouldn't be a problem. But if the Democrats take the presidency in November, Lloyd Bentsen isn't likely to appreciate the grand topiary elephant just outside the main entrance of the vice president's Victorian residence on Massachusetts Avenue. The proud elephant, with its raised leafy trunk, has ruled the lawn during the Bush vice presidency. Maybe a leafy donkey with a confrontational attitude could offer a balanced face-off . . .

Candidate Dan Quayle may no longer consider his National Guard service an issue, but the comedians are keeping it going. Just this week, late-night comic Jay Leno said there is a new Vietnam movie coming out starring Dan Quayle called "Full Dinner Jacket" . . .
